

Mary Schlaak, MSSW, is a Researcher at the Center for Health Systems Research and Analysis (CHSRA) at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She serves as the PEONIES Project Manager, and participates in other projects as well. Mary also is a Clinician Reviewer for the Centers for Disease Control-Autism Surveillance Project. She has 15 years of experience in the field of Developmental Disabilities and neuropsychological research as a clinician, manager, and care coordinator. She has worked with the State Medicaid system in the Katie Beckett and Birth to Three Early Intervention programs and as a county care manager for people with intellectual and developmental disabilities. Through these positions she has been involved in the implementation of care plans where self-determination and personal outcomes were the focus. She has also developed guidelines and procedures that are person-and family-centered in nature. She has served as a respite provider for many years through the Family Support and Resource Center.
